Types of Medical Signs

The most important signs of all are called vital signs, include your breathing rate, heart rate, temperature, and blood pressure.

Medical signs aren't always with the eyes. Sometimes we read signs by touch or by listening.

Some of the most common signs we assess in the medical field are the skin signs: color, temperature and moisture.

Simultaneous signs and symptoms

Sometimes, signs indicate symptoms.

Most medical conditions have both signs and symptoms that help identify what is wrong. For example, heart attack patients will often complain of symptoms like pain or pressure in the chest and arm.

A Word from verywell

Quite often, people who write about medicine and health will interchange the two words. Some prefer to keep it simple and use symptom more often because it's a clear indicator of what they are explaining. There are also times when a reader can overlook the word sign but will pay attention to symptom.
