INTRODUCCION

Nursing is a career that allows area professionals to enjoy the satisfaction of serving those in need., Nurses encourage, care for and protect; are people in preparation for the sick, the injured and the elderly. The infirmity in today's world. Challenges, problems and trends.

I'm studying sick, why nursing, it's a very nice race because you have to take care of the patient Exercising a profession as sacrificed as nursing is no easy task. Dealing with the care of the person in various situations related to their health implies a series of responsibilities and knowledge that every nurse must know, prior to a good training, both academically and practical. It's about linking medicine to healing the sick and nursing with the care it receives. and to continue my estand to continue my studies We come to school by bus and We always try to arrive on time I'm rushing to go infirmary I go to class twice a week. The class begins at nine o'clock, in nursing classes teach that , To build the proper Nursing Teaching Method you must know the institutional context, its mission, vision and principles that underpin it, the aulic context, both physical and virtual in which the teaching process will be developed, the quality and convenience of the materials to be used, there's an important point in the infirmary that draws me to the attention a lot, "The doctor heals, but the nurse takes care of the patient. This often involves strengthening it both emotionally and physically when, for example, you are told that you have a chronic illness or are about to die. You have to be a mother to the sick, "The nurse must be able to feel the patient's pain and anguish, and wish to help him. It takes kindness and a lot of patience. You should always be willing to learn more about nursing and medicine "From a time to this part, nurses need more and more professional knowledge. Hence the desire to study and the ability to understand what is studied are essential. In addition, nurses must make quick decisions and act without delay when the situation requires it, "We must be careful, observant and extremely professional. If one is not selfless—if the nurse is somewhat selfish or takes the advice of his superiors wrong—it will not be useful for patients or their peers There are several indispensable qualities: flexibility, tolerance and patience. You also have to be open-minded and know how to get along with colleagues and the medical hierarchy. In order not to be outdated, it is important to quickly assimilate new techniques. Nurses sometimes underestimate how valuable they are to patients , What satisfactions does the nursing provide? The answer to that question depends on the branch you work on. Midwives, for example, feel rewarded with every birth that comes to a happy end. A midwife from the Netherlands says: "It's wonderful to help birth a healthy child whose development you've overseen." Jolanda Gielen-Van Hooft, also from the Netherlands, says: "Childbirth is one of the most beautiful experiences that can be lived, not only for the couple, but also for us health professionals. It's a real miracle. In addition to providing satisfactions, nursing presents many challenges. There's no room for mistakes. Whether medication is given, blood is drawn, an intravenous cannula inserted, or simply moved to the patient, care must be taken. Carelessness cannot be committed, especially in countries where the courts are immediately used. Still, nurses sometimes find themselves in difficult situations. For example, suppose a nurse thinks the doctor has prescribed the patient the wrong medication or has sent her something that is not the most convenient for the patient. What can she do? Question the doctor's decision? Doing so requires courage and diplomacy, and holds some risk. Unfortunately, some doctors willingly accept the suggestions of those they consider subordinates.

Conclusión

It takes love for people and a sincere desire to help others. You have to be able to face stress, because in the world of nursing, it is or nothing. You have to be adaptable to do the same work when you sometimes have fewer colleagues, but without sacrificing quality. Nurses also have to fight the nerve exhaustion that results from stress. One contributing factor is staff shortages. When a conscientious nurse cannot give proper care to a patient because she is overworked, she builds up stress. If you try to remedy the situation by stopping breaks during the working day or working overtime, it seems that all you achieve is more frustration.
