ONE AND ONES

Questions for quantities, How much? and How many? Are words to ask about countable and uncountable quantities, which are related to countable nouns. Those that cannot be counted require a modifier to manifest quantity. The uncountable substances in Spanish have to do with elements like sugar or money, since you can't say three Demonstrative adjectives, affirmative, negative and question forms. Regularly adjectives demonstratives are found in the singular and plural: this pen - these pens; that notebook - those notebooks. This type of adjective consists of what is possessed: this pencil - these pencils. You can use the expression that... over there when you want to accentuate the idea manifested. Each of these demonstrative adjectives can have the following grammatical form. Affirmative form: this + is + a gray shirt. This + is + a red coat. Negative form: this + is + not a gray shirt. This + is + not a red coat. Question form: is + this + a gray shirt?

Demonstrative adjectives, affirmative, negative and question forms. That, is used for nouns in singular, which are far away: affirmative form: that + is + a red cap. Negative form: that + is + not a red cap. Question form: is + that + a red cap? These (as) is used for plural nouns, that are nearby: affirmative form: these + are + green pants. Negative form: these + are + not green pants. Question form: are + these + green pants? Those is used for plural nouns that are far away: affirmative form: those + are + cotton sweaters. Negative form: those + are + not cotton sweaters. Question form: are + those + cotton sweaters.

ONE and ONES as a demonstrative pronoun. One and ones are pronouns because they go instead of the noun either in singular and plural, this noun. When we use it in question we use which one? Not only which, since we have previously identified the object to which we refer. The demonstrative pronoun this, never goes alone, but goes together with the object. The same happens with the other demonstrative pronouns like that, these, I'm coughing.
