PREPOSITIONS

The preposition is an invariable part of the sentence, that is, it does not suffer grammatical changes or accidents (it has neither gender: feminine or masculine, nor number: singular or plural) and its purpose is to introduce a term, either a nominal group or a sentence, with which it forms an ordered set of words, in short, it unites the different elements that make up a clause. The use of prepositions is mandatory in the construction of correct and coherent sentences.
