Veterinary

The veterinary had his birth since the first domestication between a human and a wild animal, and of course took care of the specie, the practice of veterinary is older just like any other professions like normal medicine, engineering, etc. since the old Greeks, we have important personalities like Aristotle who wrote the most important text about healing of animals and their physiology, reproduction and meant to be in the world. Rome with a lot of influence of Greece had their own workers who looked out of the horses of the empire nearly all knowledge registered by the greeks. If we want to look for the first similar title of a formal veterinary, back there in ancient China, the emperor had their own professionals in the health of the animals who also took care of the army horses.

Years later the first School specialized in Veterinary was funded in France, the students who egressed from there using their knowledge and opened, maybe a little bit better than the French one like the Spanish one, every country of Europe had their own school. In the past being a veterinary of an army was a great opportunity. In America the only thing that the natives knew was domesticating with their ancient knowledge a few local species but was with the contact with the first Europeans that a proper veterinary discipline begun.

Here in Mexico, we have one of the greatest presence of cattle and an incredible potential that is being exploited for the good, also is a good place to study veterinary, there is a lot of work and we could say that is one of the most gratifying and the prettiest of all the careers dedicated to health and sanity. It would be great if people give more importance to veterinary and have the conscience of attend both; domestic animals and productive animals with a professional and no letting them down or treating them themselves giving a bad diagnose, making it only worse or in the most horrible cases death.
