

Future simple

'if you will do as I tell you, your fortune is made'

Past simple

'There was once a miller who, when he died...'

'The youngest son was very unhappy'

'It was too tempting'

'The cat quickly pulled the strings and the rabbit was dead'

'She was brought before the throne and there'

Past continuous

'He went to the river and while he was bathing'

- Resumen -

There was once a miller who, when he died, had nothing to leave to his three sons but a mill, a donkey, and a cat.

The mill he left to his eldest son, the donkey to the second, and to the youngest he left the cat.

- 'Alas!' he said, 'This cat is of no use to me and I am too poor to feed her.'

- 'Do not grieve, dear master,' said the cat. 'You have only to give me a bag and get a pair of boots made for me, so that I may scamper through the dirt and brambles, and you shall find that you are not so badly off as you think.'

Puss put on the boots with a proud air, slung the bag over her shoulder, and went to the garden. There she gathered some lettuce and put them into the bag. Next she went across the field until she came to a rabbit hole. Then she lay down as if dead, leaving the top of her bag open.

- 'Sire, pray accept this rabbit as a gift from my lord the Marquis of Carabara, who commanded me to present it to Your Majesty with the assurance of his respect.

One day, Puss heard that the king and his beautiful daughter were going to drive along the riverside.

Never again did she have to hunt mice for a meal, but she was served all kinds of delicacies until the end of her days.

THE END.