Sentences in the simple past are composed of a subject, a verb in the past tense, and a complement.

However in negative sentences in the simple past the auxiliary "did" is added followed by the word "not" and then the verb is occupied in its natural form.

The past tense of negative sentences is formed by writing did before the verb, and then we write not. The verb is written in its simple form for regular verbs and for irregular verbs. The use of contraction didn't (did not) is common. You didn't work very hard last week.
