The window

Introduction

The story of the window includes as main characters a boy named Juan and his grandfather and as secondary characters the grandmother. They often climbed a hill for flowers for grandmother.

Climax

Juan liked to climb that hill and not precisely because of the flowers. If it weren't for the fact that when climbing the hill at the top there was a haunted house, which he liked to observe very much and that he wasn't going to tell his grandfather so that he would not be scared.

On the hill there was a house very different from the rest since it had windows and windows everywhere, without a doubt it was a house full of windows, but of all of them there was only one different, he said it was the narrowest and elongated, when he climbed the hill, he spent it looking at it dumbfounded, he said it was his favorite window.

One day like any other his grandfather told him that, because they did not look at what was inside, but he was very high, therefore, the grandfather told him that the next day they would take a very long ladder to climb there.

The next day they returned to the hill, the first climb was the grandfather, he stayed for a long time looking

Out the window when he returned his eyes were full of tears he did not say anything to Juan so that he could also observe. When Juan went upstairs, he noticed that his grandfather was sitting there by a fireplace, reading a book, but he was not an old man, but a child like him. When he returned to his grandfather, he asked him what his grandfather had observed, his grandfather observed Juan, with a long white beard, similar to his.

The both picked up the ladder and went the same way they would do together again each day.

The end

In this story the grandfather and his grandson unite past and future in the present, today and now. When the grandfather looks out the window in the house of time he sees the future, on the other hand, when the child looks out the window of the house of time, he sees the past. But in reality, both are part of the present.
