THE RAGGED PIRATE

(El pirata escacharrado)

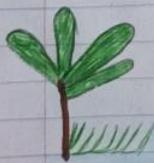

In this text as the main character there is only the pirate. This pirate was a pirate who stole ships and one day bad luck came to him which made him change things since the sea was taking him away and that is where he decided to change things.

This story is about a pirate better known as the escacharrado pirate, since he was a pirate who had a wooden eye and a leg full of eyes and long hair, this pirate said that bad luck had come into his life without knowing because.

Since that dilapidated corcair no longer had knives or hooks or the patch over his eye, neither did his evil face, since he had such long nails. Since they served as an anchor when he braked his ship. The pirate always rested on the deserted islands, since they all disappeared as soon as they landed on them and thus he lived scared of fear, with his wooden eye, his paw full of eyes and his feet full of hair.

He said that the land and the sea had forgotten him and he lamented in spite of having stolen a hundred ships, sailing a thousand hours and having been such a bad pirate.

The pirate no longer had the strength to continue trying, since after much thought he decided to abandon his stripes (four badly patched shreds on the lapel of an old and stiff jacket) on the high seas.

And from then on the pirate bad luck never came to visit him again.
