Why is the festival of the dead day filled us with happiness?

To begin with, the festival of the Dead Day is great tradition in Mexico, where everyone enjoys that day with happiness and at the same time with sadness as it refers to our loved ones who have already left but we honor that day.

The day of the dead is not only tradition in Mexico but also elsewhere like the United States, they have already taken this tradition constantly, it is already global in many countries.

November 2 is celebrated on the days of the dead, where families make varieties of meals such as tamales, sweets, pozole, hand omelets and among other things more than traditions, as they do activities that are constantly carried out on this date, decorate houses with flowers and put an altar.

People to pay tribute usually wear skulls, paint themselves, wear dresses in the case of women and suits in the case of gentlemen, wear black, purple, orange, yellow, and even may include other colors to seek to highlight, paint their skulls faces and wear hats. in schools' children often make decorations, when I was little in school, we made choked paper and skulls.

The other year I intend to be going to the pantheon on the day of the dead, to live with others and the deceased, as it is a tradition and eat a little of what it is wearing that day.

I'm going to be going to family members in the same way to look at altars and agree, that day I'll be with my relatives and closer people are in trouble to have everything ready in time since there are those who even pray.

Why do I say the day of the dead is a tradition? because since I was little when I arrived on November 2, I was going out with my parents in the pantheon and my father grandmother toward tamales and coffee, my aunt decorated at her house an altar where they left offerings and put the photos of all the loved ones who had left and no longer met us in the same way we ate together the altar while we spoke memories we had with them, the flowers of cempasuchil could not miss.

The day of the dead makes us reflect on life and death, makes us think beyond what we live, ask ourselves many questions based on the tradition we are carrying out and reminds us of because we do it. Many people do it for the great love they have to their loved ones that in life gave them love and happiness, on my part I would like in some future to continue going with my family to take this tradition and in the same way teach the new generations about it and that they can live the same sense of this festivity.
