The career of “veterinary medicine and its relationship with other sciences”

Veterinary
pharmacology

As with drugs for humans, drug treatments for animals must go through rigorous research studies and regulatory processes before being released to the market.

Veterinary
microbiology

Veterinary microbiologists often lead treatments against infectious diseases caused by bacteria, parasites and other organisms, since these types of diseases usually occur earlier in animals than in humans.

Animal
anesthesiology

Specialists in this Branch are responsible for administering anesthesia before and after surgical interventions, including cesarean sections in complicated deliveries, either through epidural injections or drip infusions to control dosage.

Veterinary Nutrition

It has been shown that having a proper diet helps prevent illness and recover more quickly.
