Veterinary Medicine Zootechnics

Medicine

It is the health science dedicated to the prevention, diagnosis, prognosis and treatment of diseases, injuries and health problems of human beings.

Zootechnics

science that studies various parameters for the best use of domestic and wild animals, taking care of animal welfare

Veterinary

application of medicine in animals

Microbiology

Veterinary microbiologists often lead treatments against infectious diseases caused by bacteria, parasites and other organisms, since these types of diseases usually occur earlier in animals than in humans.

Agriculture

is dedicated to the cultivation of the land in order to obtain products for human use and animal food

Internal Medicine

These specialists are highly trained to treat rare or complex diseases. Pet owners usually go to these veterinarians when their pets require advanced treatments. Internal medicine professionals can, in turn, specialize in cardiology, neurology, oncology or veterinary pulmonology.

Veterinary pharmacology

Veterinary microbiologists often lead treatments against infectious diseases caused by bacteria, parasites and other organisms, since these types of diseases usually occur earlier in animals than in humans.

Microbiology

Nutrition

It has been shown that having a proper diet helps prevent illness and recover more quickly. Veterinary nutritionists collaborate with companies that manufacture animal foods in the design of more balanced and healthy formulas.

Radiology

Diagnostics using X-rays, ultrasound and magnetic resonance imaging, long reserved for humans, are now also widely used for animals. Of course, these tools had to be adapted by experienced radiologists so that they can be used with animals of all sizes, from small cats to large elephants.
