I want to start by saying that for me nursing is a vocation, because we express our concern to keep our patient alive and help him recover well-being in his health, so for me it is important to emphasize that nursing will always seek to keep a patient in the best conditions possible, Looking for the purpose that we all learn more about this topic, and achieve that in each practical technique or process you can have more experience in nursing.

The topic he's talking about is the nursing jobs rate, so to speak. To my little understanding I have taken importance on the record that has a branch nurses for learning problems, in adults, children and mental health, I think it is one of the parts in which a nurse has to be sufficiently trained to be able to achieve good care, in what I read, Emphasize second-level nurses, and first-level nurses. Honestly it seemed strange to me, and although I need to understand more I think this refers to the level of professionalism of the nurses. The Nursing and Midwifery Council in this case, in the United Kingdom I found some points of vital importance, among them are that, if one as a nurse has a misconduct and has been guilty, practically speaking to my understanding is subjected to the withdrawal of his license or professional practice of nursing. For me this gives more seriousness to this nursing career, since it makes every nurse who practices this profession, or at least for me it is a vocation, it will have more relevance in their way of working, conduct, treatment of the patient and a good relationship in their work environment. The same nursing council mentions a code of professional conduct. I see it as norms or rules that a nurse must have as it is a good moral, professional and social ethics with patients, to become familiar, understand and apply this professional code. As I mentioned before giving an example, if I as a nurse do not pay attention or fail to comply with this moral code, I would be called to the residence where I work and I even dare to think that I would be called to a court of law. That is why it is important to maintain that commitment in our learning of nursing, because it is constantly updated and we would carry it in our daily lives, this book of Nursing from the United Kingdom shows a strong and beautiful message at the same time of nursing, this is the most important thing which I can highlight in my opinion.

I have come to understand that the majority of nurses in the United Kingdom are part of a union or organization, this in order that one as a nurse has a greater well-being and also gave me to understand that it seeks a good interest of the affiliated nurses. They also give constant training of every update that there is in this profession. In general, nursing covers many areas of work, from hospitals, schools or nursing education institutes, nursing training areas, in the case of Mexico the armed forces or navy, among many others. It caught my attention that nursing has new nursing training programs, and that this began in the 80's and was called project 2000 or PK2. In my opinion, this program is responsible for better training nurses, from the professional field, to the social, emotional and patient-nurse relationship. I like to know that nurses, as in the case of the book Nursing of the United Kingdom, no longer only work in hospitals, but also now with each of the communities, and I like that, because it puts me closer to patients and thus understand their lifestyles, economic or personal situations that pass, as I like to interact with patients. Even in a hospital they are not only in the different care rooms, nurses are also in places of itinerant patients, even nurses in this case as the book says already perform more functions than a doctor used to perform. We are free to decide whether to work for the public or private sector. It is also clear to me that older adults is the area where it is more difficult and requires a lot of dedication, I feel that with older adults as patients, we realize that nursing is a profession of dedication and passion, at least I think that the elderly are certainly more delicate and require better and greater attention, And that they are more vulnerable, this is where that love for the nursing profession has to come in, and for me personally it is the area where one is best formed as a nurse and creates that patient-nurse bond or relationship.

In this way I can say that nursing is more than a profession with ethics and codes of conduct, but it is also an absolute dedication, since in this book of Nursing from the United Kingdom gave me to understand that nursing has many factors, both the relationship and communication with the patient, the treatment that we must give to the patient from an ethical way but also socio-emotional and psychological and after having Known, analyzed and understood what I talk about these issues I am satisfied by the knowledge I have learned about nursing itself, thank you very much and I hope you like the little I could rescue and understand.
