England has 51 cities. Lots of people think that any town which has a cathedral in it is classified as a city. Contrary to this popular belief, which stems from the fact that Henry VIII built cathedrals in six English towns and made them cities by letters patent, this is not the case. Whilst city status in England can be associated with having a cathedral or a university, a particular form of local government, or a large population, formal city status is only granted by the monarch on the advice of ministers. The biggest city in England is London, and the smallest city in England is the City of London.
