On January 25, 2006, beautiful twin girls were born, bringing joy to the Vazquez family. We're originally from Comitán, but that year my parents took us to live on a small ranch we owned about 7 hours from Comitán. We traveled constantly from one ranch to another until my parents bought a house. We moved permanently to Comitán. As time went by, we began to grow and entered preschool. As far back as I can remember, my mother's father always visited us, and we were always on the lookout for him when he arrived. We would run to hug him. He always brought us fruit or candy and made us very happy. Although my grandmother, my father's mother, was upset because my grandfather was always Francisco Villa with his two wives on the shore.

With the passage of the years, around 2012 we were in the final stretch of preschool, something that my grandfather always told us he was proud of us and that we were going to go far, but he never said that he would now be far from us. One day at night my mother took us 2 blocks from my house where my grandfather was, during the way my mother told us that she was going to take us to say goodbye to my grandfather since he was returning the next day, and that we should ask him to sing us his songs that he knew since he was sick, we arrived and my grandfather sang us songs, there were many, but in that year our brains were still not running smoothly and we only know each other as 2. (And the milkman left shouting at one, twenty) Days, months and years passed and my grandfather who always visited us never returned and every time we asked
