Introduction

I've always loved cats, but my parents never gave me permission to have one, until one day a beautiful kitten came into my life whom I decided to call "Nuez". While I was studying in my room, she played with her toys, she also loved to go outside and every time she did, she would go out and come back through the back door, she did that and other things that will always remain engraved in my mind, heart and skin (because of her scratches), i say this because she isn't stand with me, so i hope she is happy somewhere in heaven.

Development

It was Wednesday, and I had to go to school, so I said "bye" to my family (including my cat, of course). During the day, I was happy, enjoying my classes and laughing with my friends when the bell rang, signaling the end of classes. My mom called me, and I remember that while I was walking with my friend and discussing our plans for the weekend, she told me, "You don't know what happened to Nuez." When she said that, I felt like my nervous system had stopped, and many things went through my head. Afterwards, my mom told me everything about the situation; she had told me that my kitten had gone out to play, but since they had left metal materials in the patio, she ended up getting hurt and couldn't survive, i didn't mind breaking down in public; I knew I wouldn't be able to see my cat again, and that broke my heart. She had been my first kitten, and since she left, I haven't been able to have another kitten.

Conclusion

It's an experience that was quite painful at the time, but although the wound still hasn't fully healed, every time I remember my cat, I do so with more joy, and from the bottom of my heart I hope to reach old age with her memory still with me in my thoughts. This situation led me to conclude that life is strange; we don't know what will happen or when we'll see our loved ones for the last time. Since that day, I've been more affectionate, especially when saying goodbye.
