This story is very peculiar because it happened to me when I was a child a long time ago. My mom and dad always worked during my childhood. When mom had to work in the mornings, dad was the one who took care of me since he worked in the afternoons. On one occasion when I stayed with my dad I wanted to play a joke on him but everything went wrong. It was a morning when we were having breakfast before mom went to work, of course I had to stay with dad, it was something I didn't like because he was very angry and bitter, that morning he decided to go visit one of his sisters, he told me to get ready, I got ready and I told him that I was leaving because he wasn't in a hurry, I hid under the bed so he would look for me and it turned out that he left without me, leaving me alone and locked up thinking that I had already left, as I let him know, when I realized that he was no longer there the doors closed I started to cry because being alone at home and locked up I was very scared, after a long time my grandmother came home to visit my mom, she heard me crying and called my mom to come see me and open the door and in the end my dad didn't care that I was left alone and locked up, when mom came to open the door she scolded me and told me not to do that again because it's not funny, when dad arrived he scolded me and that he had realized that I was under the bed, and left me there to teach me a lesson.

In the end, the lesson I learned was that I never played pranks on my parents again because they were serious and raised differently, now that I think because something bad would have happened to me being home alone, or my dad would have thought I was lost for telling him I was leaving without him.
