This is a story where the topics of simple past and past continuous are addressed. The characters we will see are my brother and my sister.

It was a quiet Saturday afternoon and Ana was sitting on the couch reading her favorite novel. The soft sound of the rain pattering against the windows created a relaxing rhythm and her cat, Felix, slept peacefully next to her. She was completely immersed in the story when suddenly her phone rang.

Surprised, Ana put down the book and grabbed her phone. It was his brother, Carlos. He seemed unusually excited.

—Ana, you won't believe this! I found Mom's old music box in the attic! -.

While Carlos was explaining how he had found the box, Ana was already putting on her jacket and decided to go home to see it for herself.

When Ana arrived, Carlos was standing in the living room, holding the small wooden box. Its intricate carvings and faded paint showed its age, but it was

"I was looking for some old photo albums when I saw this hidden in the corner," Carlos said, carefully opening the box. Inside, a delicate melody began to play, filling the space.

As the music played, Ana and Carlos sat together and reminisced about their childhood. They remembered how their mother used to wind the music box every night while she told them bedtime stories.

When the tune stopped, the rain had stopped outside and the sky was glowing with the warm hues of sunset. It was a simple but meaningful moment, a reminder of their shared past and the little treasures hidden in the unexpected.
